SCOPE OF PRESIDENCY

POWER OF CHIEF MAGISTRATE GROWING, SAYS WILSON.

NEW YORK, March 16.-Woodrow Wil president of Princeton University, "The President of the United States," emphasized the fact that the power of the President is constantly growing and that the presidency has come to be some thing entirely different from what it was inended to be by the makers of the Constitution. While they intended him to be only the executive of the laws, he has become, according to Dr. Wilson, the political leader of his party and the popular leader of the whole nation. By his work in these capacities his executive duties have been sub-Presidents and Newspapers.

Dr. Wilson said that with the immense business of government it was absolutely impossible for a President to be an executive. "I have," he said, "in the course of my life known two or three Presidents, and in talking with them the most interesting thing I have found out is how little they know about affairs in Washington. What they find out they learn by reading the newspapers, and they do not have time to read as much as an ordinary citizen. I have known ex-Presidents to turn back after they got out of office to find out what hap-pened while they were Presidents. If a President gets any sleep at all, he can find out but a small part of what is going on." Dr. Wilson termed the messages of Pres-idents "only interesting assays" depending idents "only interesting essays," depending for their force entirely on the character of the man behind them. The speaker avoided almost all reference to President Roosevelt, speaking of him only once. This was when he spoke of the fact that the President had become a leader of the whole people. Dr. Wilson told how a person who wanted any-thing done could have little success if he went to Congress with it. "Everybody," said the speaker, "who wants anything done goes to the President, and in the present case the President seems willing to do any-

Effect of Spanish War.

Some of Dr. Wilson's remarks follow: From 1865 to 1898 no President except Mr. Cleveland played a leading part in the drama of our life, and he played only because of his native force and the confused politics of the time, not because he was offered leadership by the system which has subordinated so many Presidents before him to Congress. The war with Spain changed the whole balance of parts in our government. Foreign questions came to the front as they had in the first days of the government, and in them the President was of necessity leader. Our new place in the affairs of nations has kept him at tention centers.

There is an evident tendency which has gathered force from generation to genera-tion to look upon him as the unifying force in the complex system, the leader of both the party and the nation. The role of party leader is forced upon the President by the method of his choice—by the system of party convention which has grown up since Jackson's day. It is sometimes a very uncertain way and even a haphazard method of choosing a leader. Men who are the actual leaders of their party have again and again been passed by the choice, and comparatively obscure and colorless men chosen. Men of sudden and recent eminence, too, have been picked out, whom few beforehand had thought of as desirable or available. The tendency, however, has been to discover the real leaders when the posture of affairs was such as to make effective leadership desirable. There is no school for presidential candidates un-tion Laws His Aim. Shipping commissioners' offices on the Atlantic seaboard will soon be examined by a committee designated by Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Besides ordinary administrative details the committee will especially investigate crimping and shanghaling.
